

A friend asks for the name of a good industry contact, your reflexologist, that nice, persuadable pre-school administrator (applications are due). Happily, you assist. When she inquires about that gorgeous, solid 22-karat gold cuff, your memory is simply at a loss. One cannot reveal the important things. The woman who ventures brilliantly into the realm of impossibly beautiful jewelry is Janis Provisor. Unencumbered by glittery fetishes, the accomplished artist, painter and rug designer submerges herself in the rich artisan traditions of Asia and turns her own imaginative narrations of place and mood into one-of-a-kind accessories that captivate like sweet, startling confessions. Children's candy inspired this handcrafted lavalier from the Budekling Couture collection. A succulent confection of cherry quartz and white jade—the delicious teardrop inlaid with faceted pink tourmaline. Every stone hand-carved, a rainbow of white aquamarine, lemon citrine, garnet, mandarin garnet, peridot and iolite to encircle the wrist—Ms. Provisor's collection is a treat for very good girls.
